STAR RESORT

The Adirondacks

Want to marry where the celebs do? In each issue, we take a peek at a star-studded hideaway.

Quiet and private. It's uncommon such adjectives are used to describe stars these days, who are quick to use social media to connect with fans. But those two words embody Oscar-winner Michelle Williams, who only graces the 'gram when she's snapped by Busy Phillips, her BFF and godmother to her daughter with the late Heath Ledger. In fact, the indie darling actress keeps her private life so exactly that, the tabloids and world didn't even know she was dating musician Phil Elverum until she announced they had been married in an interview with Vanity Fair. The pair swapped vows with an intimate group that included their children from previous relationships in the equally off-the-grid Adirondack Mountains of upstate New York.

The Point, a sprawling lakeside property first built by a Rockefeller nearly a century ago, encapsulates the vibe of both the reserved celebrity couple and the surrounding verdant destinations. As one of the original "Great Camps" of the Gilded Age, the 11-room hideaway has always been a rustic, luxe retreat for those looking to enjoy the great outdoors. Today's guests enjoy robust activity options that celebrate the pristine natural setting—fishing, boating and hiking in warm months; cross-country skiing, curling and snowshoeing in winter. Meals here are leisurely and served in the Great Hall or in the sumptuous comfort of the individually appointed guest rooms, all of which have fireplaces (room rates start at $1,750 a night and are all inclusive; thepointsaranac.com).—Jenna Mahoney
