

The Best Dog-Friendly Hotels in the U.S. to Visit With Your Pooch

Try as I might, I'll never forget it. I was on a tour of historic (and historically lovely) Bedford Springs Resort, which is snuggled within the verdant forests of southeastern Pennsylvania. Because the property was dog-friendly, I'd brought along my pug, Lola. Now, pugs are a notoriously needy, clingy breed. But I had no idea that as soon as I left the room, Lola would begin howling at the top of her little lungs and not stop until the general manager, a man of infinite patience, whisked her away to his office. There, he installed her beside his desk and fed her doggie cookies to keep her quiet until I was able to pick her up.

While I learned my lesson and never brought Lola on another trip, there are plenty of people with dogs who are far better behaved than my pug. And like Bedford Springs, there are now an abundance of luxurious dog-friendly hotels, inns, and B&Bs across the United States that will happily welcome these well-mannered furballs with special amenities that can range from treats to entire canine menus. Some, like The Point Resort in Saranac Lake, New York or The Pittman in Dallas, Texas, don't even charge extra fees for four-legged guests. If you're thinking about taking a vacay with your hound, read on for our suggestions of the 25 best dog-friendly hotels in the country.

6. The Point Resort - Saranac Lake, New York

Originally built for William Avery Rockefeller II in the early 30s, The Point sits lakeside on 75 acres in the Adirondacks. The resort rolls out the red carpet for its canine guests, with special meals and even a doggie libation: "Bowser's Beer." Beds, bowls, and toys for pooches are placed in rooms upon arrival, and there are dog life vests provided for boating adventures. Dogs of any size and breed can roam almost everywhere on the property, and there is no extra charge to bring them.
