

9 luxury expedition hotels you can visit without leaving the US

Katie Lockhart

September 19 2022 · 8 min read

Adventures in the great outdoors have never been more popular.

By 2027, experts estimate that adventure tourism will have grown by 20%, with travelers spending more than $2.5 billion worldwide, according to a recent market report.

These types of trips, which often involve jetting off to a remote location for intense outdoor activities, can test travelers physically and mentally. It's a full sensory experience that reawakens your love for nature while getting the adrenaline pumping. But you don't have to venture to the farthest reaches of the globe for an adventurous expedition. In fact, there are many resorts and lodges that can help you get in touch with Mother Nature without leaving the U.S.

And it's not all tents and tiny houses, either. From glacier-top lodges in Alaska to lakeside log cabins in New York, these ultraluxurious expedition hotels will help you have a transformative journey in the great outdoors, no passport required.

The Point in New York

The Point is hidden away in the Adirondacks on Saranac Lake. THE POINT

Built by the Rockefellers in the 1930s, this New York City getaway is an Adirondacks institution on Saranac Lake. Guests here are encouraged to do as much (or as little) as they desire in this plush log cabin hideaway. Outdoor activities here vary according to the season, from water skiing and badminton in the spring and summer to ice skating and curling in the fall and winter months. And, back at the log cabins, hot toddies and roaring indoor and outdoor fires draw guests in. In 2022, nightly rates at The Point (which are inclusive of equipment use, all meals, afternoon tea, wines and spirits for two adults) start at $2,050.